

If not now, when?

Why young Americans are joining the health care reform movement

If you

...plan to work after high school, health reform will make sure your employer offers you insurance and pays for most of the premium, so you can pay your rent and still have some to save.

...graduate from college and don't find a job right away, health reform will let you stay on your parents' health plan until you are 26, so you can wait for the right job.

...think that finding the right job means working for yourself, health reform will pick up some of the tab so you can afford to buy insurance on your own.

...are starting a family, health reform will provide coverage for maternity care, and birth control, so you don't have to put your family planning after your financial planning.

...worry about medical debt, health reform will guarantee that your insurance won't bankrupt you by requiring all insurers to cap annual out-of-pocket costs.

...want to know that your parents and grandparents will have access to quality care and affordable medications, health reform will strengthen Medicare so it's there when they need it.

...love your job but wonder what else is out there, health reform will give you consistent affordable options, no matter what turns your career path takes.

If we ...want to end discrimination based on race, religion, creed, or diagnosis

...dream of leaving to our kids a more compassionate country, one that won't let 8 million children go uninsured

...believe in the pursuit of happiness more than the pursuit of a benefits plan

...reject the old premise that only the rich can afford to get sick

...want to build a new nation that takes its strength from looking after its people

...are the generation of hope that can heal our divided, broken system, then call your Members of Congress and tell them to pass health reform now.

Find out who represents you in Congress, then call (202)224-3121 and ask to speak to them by name.

For more ideas on how to work toward affordable, quality health care for all, check out Community Catalyst's National Health Reform Resources.